December 8, 2006 – Hartford Public Schools' University High School of Science and Engineering officially welcomed its newest class of students today with a banner-signing ceremony. It was the third group of approximately 100 students to be welcomed to the school in what has become a school tradition.

University of Hartford President Walter Harrison and Hartford Superintendent of Schools Steven Adamowski addressed the newest members of the school as did Principal Elizabeth Colli and the class presidents of the previous years' entering classes. After the speeches, each student came forward to sign a large banner, which is displayed in a prominent location at the school.

Now in its third year, University High is a magnet school operated by the Hartford Public Schools in partnership with the University of Hartford. University High prepares its students from Hartford and 27 surrounding communities for college, leading to careers in science, engineering and technology fields.
